"Ontological" means "the study of being." Tillich says love, power and justice are united in the structure of being(using philosophical terms)or united in the heart of God (paraphrasing from his Systematic Theology--Tillich doesn't say much about God in this book). When love, power and justice are separated in a situation, it becomes unstable. "Being" (or God) is the power that drives the situation toward stability--that is, toward a situation where love, power and justice are in balance.

Love Power Justice

With Paul Tillich we have an interpretation of love and justice that is closer to that of Rauschenbusch, insofar as both reject a stark antithesis between the two concepts, but Tillich's analysis also differs in dramatic ways from Rauschenbusch. Tillich's methodology is reflected in the structure of Love, Power, and Justice. After identifying problematic "confusions" in popular understandings of each of the three concepts, Tillich's next three chapters offer "an ontology" of ...

The principles of love, power, and justice are applied to God only symbolically. Because they are principles of being and God is the ground or abyss of being, we can only speak symbolically of “God” (the symbolic persona with which we orient matters of ultimate concern) and God’s love, power, and justice. In this final chapter, Tillich absolutely blazes through a hyper-condensed version of his systematic theology.

Justice is a negative application of love. Whereas love seeks out the needs of others, justice limits freedom to prevent its infringement upon the rights and privileges of others. Justice is a check (by force, if necessary) upon ambitions of individuals seeking to overcome their own insecurity at the expense of others.
